THE PARDONING POWER.

A citizen of Richmond said in our hearing the other day that in his opinion one cause of lawlessness in the South is the too liberal exercise of the pardoning power by the Governor. It is his idea that if the people were confident that all lawbreakers would be duly convicted and sentenced, and that the sentence would surely be carried out, lynchings in Virginia would be almost unknown.

There is something in this, yet it must be said that the people in the various localities of the State are more responsible in one sense than the Governor for what our friend calls a too liberal exercise of the pardoning power. When the friends of a penitentiary convict approach the Governor with a petition signed by the judge of the trial court, the Commonwealth's attorney, the members of the Sury, the witnesses in the case and prominent citizens generally, it is a hard matter for the Governor to reject such a petition and refuse to pardon the conwict. It is usually declared in such petitions that the circumstances under which the crime was committed were peculiar, and in the opinion of the petitioners the convict has been sufficiently punished; that he is a reformed man, and that if he be pardoned he will in all probability lead a correct life, whereas if kept in prison to the end of the term he may come out a hardened criminal, and so on. It is also stated in many such cases that the prisoner is a man of delicate health, and that if he is not pardoned he will either die in prison or come out a physical wreck. The Governor naturally supposes that these petitioners understand the case better than he, and however anxious he may be to execute justice, it is very hard for him to deny such n strong appeal.

But where such petitions are brought to the Governor he should, if possible, investigate the circumstances under which the petition was "gotten up." We all know how easy it is to "get up" a petition for anything. Americans seem to have a mania for signing petitions, and often they will sign without taking the trouble to investigate for themselves. A woman in tears goes to some weak member of the jury and gets him to sign, then she uses the fact that one has signed to get another to sign, and then she uses the fact that two have signed to get others to sign, and so on to the end. Virginlans are all tenderhearted and merciful, and it is very hard for them to reject the pleas of mother or wife or sister under such distressing circumstances. In one of the Virginia cities several year ago a prisoner who had been sened to jail by the Mayor and who was being escorted to jail by the chief of poe, deliberately drew a concealed weapon rom his pocket and put a ball into the chief. It so happened that the Mayor was standing by when the shot was fired. By good luck the wound was not fatal, but that was through no fault of the man who inflicted it. In all our experience we have never known of a more dastardly crime; we have never known a man to show such utter contempt for the law. But, wonderful to relate, in less than six months that man was pardoned out of the penitentiary upon a petition signed by the Mayor and the chief of police. The chief of police explained to one of his friends who questioned him on the subject that he could not refuse to sign the Setition because, having been wounded by this man, it would appear that he harpored malice against him; the Mayor Bigned because the chief of police signed, and when these two had signed, it was the best argument in the world to get others to sign. And so that petition was brought to Richmond and presented to the Governor, and the Governor granted the pardon. Now we mean to say that if the Governor of Virginia, who received this petition, and who acted upon it, had known the exact circumstances of the case of the outrageous crime of this convict and the circumstances under which the pardon was obtained he would not have entertained it for one moment.

But after all, it comes back to the or iginal proposition. If the people of Virginia do not want the Governor to exercise "executive clemency" too liberally, let them stop signings petitions.

AMERICAN EDUCATION FOR AME-RICANS.

In view of the provisions of the will of the late Cecil Rhodes, Mr. John Corbin's book, "An American at Oxford," which is just out, possesses peculiar interest. The New York Times, in some comments on the book and upon the course of study at Oxford, says:

That Oxford, since it was rescued at the beginning of the nineteenth century from its degeneration during the eighteenth, has been a very eligible place for the education of English gentlemen has not been disputed. But it has been denied to be a place in which even Eng-lishmen could be best prepared to earn their brings, excepting in "the learned professions," strictly so-called, or in lit-erature. And, indeed, its advantages for this purpose are quite as much social as scholastic, if not more so. That singular system of privilege and favor which over-spreads the United Kingdom so much more oppressively than any other civilized country makes a "university edu-cation" most desirable for Englishmen who intend to take the recognized and customary means! of advancement. But to avail himself of these advantages to the full the undergraduate must be, in the first place, an Englishman. As Mr. Corbin puts it, Oxford is a "closely organized ante-room to social and professional life," that is, to English social and professional life. This is in line with some comments of curs on the same subject. Oxford Make instruments to plague us."

See doubtless a good place to educate the — New York World, s doubtless a good place to educate the son of an English gentleman, to educate a man who proposes to make his home in England and to be a part and parcel of the English system. But we cannot agree that the American youth who proposes to make America his home and proposes to become a part and parcel of the American system should receive his training in a foreign institution. A boy learns at college much that is not taught in the books, and the influence generally of college life has much to do with forming his tastes and his opinions and molding his character. If he is trained in an English school he will be trained in the English way, and everything that such training can do will be done to make him an Englishman.

We have a very high regard for the cultivated Englishman. He is a very high type of man. But we believe in the fitness of things, and we believe that the trained American is a better man for America than the trained Eng lishman. Therefore, we believe that our American youth should be trained in American institutions.

STRIKES AND LAW.

The United Mine Workers of the anthracite district of Pennsylvania were called out yesterday, but the instructions previously issued for the men to suspend work did not include firemen, engineers, pump runners or other laborers necessary to preserve the properties of the operators

This is most commendable, and if the strike be conducted on that line of fairness and conservatism this organization will command the respect of all lovers of law and order. The above instruction implies not only that the organization does not propose to injure the property of the mine operators, but to protect it Labor organizations are entirely legitimate and it is the right of all such organizations to quit work when they do not like the terms of their employers. It is entirely proper for such organizations to employ any legitimate agency to win in a contest of this character. But labor organizations can never afford, no matter what the provocation, to violate the law of the land, to destroy property or in any way to trespass upon the rights of the concerns of whatever character with which they are contending. Whenever they do so they injure their cause and weaken themselves and forfeit their right to the confidence and sympathy of the public.

Strikers can accomplish no good thing by resort to violence and disorder.

On Sunday last Rev. Dr. Parkhurst preached in the Madison Square Presbyerian Church upon the nature of Christian love. He took for his text Matthew xii, 46-59, concluding as follows: "For v hosoever shall do the will of my Father, which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." He said in beginning:

"When you go walking or riding or traveling, you quite probably go with members of your 'set.' The ladies and gentlemen that you invite to your receptions most of them belong to your set You invite them and they invite you That is nice and pleasant and exceedingly natural-but it is not love. A lovefeast, a love-reception, is quite a different style of performance; the programme for such a reception Christ laid down rather distinctly in Luke xiv, where we are told to call the poor, the ame, the blind."

We shall attach more importance to the Doctor's sermon when we know what rule he employs in selecting his companions and guests.

The young man turned up at home safe and sound about two o'clock yesterday afternoon. After walk-ing up the James River Rallroad track some distance Sunday afternoon, he had decided to turn across to Westhampton Park. Thence he endeavored to mak his way directly back to the city, but missing his road in the deepening shad-ows of the evening he wandered about for quite a time and finally retraced his steps to Westhampton Park, and from thence to the railroad. On reaching the canal and the railroad he became confused in the darkness and turned to the west instead of the east. He walked on and on in the darkness without knowing of his mistake until he finally reached Rock Castle, and was turned about in the right direction.
